WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND
Soviet Union Heads for Manpower
Crisis Within Next Seven Years

By Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Barren headlines for the last seven years, the Soviet Union is heading for a manpower crisis which may force the Kremlin to relax its one child of a family policy and free the workers more than ever to spend their own time instead of working for the state.

This is the conclusion of two studies by respected experts, Dr. Murray Feshbach, expert on Soviet economics, and Dr. Donald Alexander, expert on Soviet education, and both published in the current edition of the American Sociological Review.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s con cession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s concession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s concession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s concession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s concession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s concession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

For the first time, Dr. Feshbach concedes that the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.

According to Dr. Feshbach’s study analysis, the Soviet government would have to pay much more than $51.5 worth to each family so that the family could go on with their own business and produce a baby.

But for Dr. Feshbach’s concession, the Soviet people may be able to rise to the occasion and that the government is facing a demographic crisis ever since the war.